

Some generalisations around keeping a learning log

Most 'professionals' feel....

1. Being a professional means more than passing exams years ago – it's about maintaining standards.

My view:

2. A learning log sounds a good idea, but come on who's got the time?

My view:

3. This effort has no value, I won't get 'struck off' if I don't do this and I don't see anyone else doing it.

My view:

4. I go on plenty of 'proper' training courses, that cost a lot of money, so this can't be worth much.

My view:

5. It doesn't suit my personality or learning style – I am not someone who sits down and writes reflectively.

My view:

6. Even if I can be bothered, my job and life hasn't got a lot of learning experiences to reflect upon.

My view:

7. I had to do this as part of an academic programme and couldn't wait to drop it – what a pain!

My view:

8. Yes, it will be an interesting exercise, and will differentiate me from those who can't be bothered.

My view: